A Grand Gathering of Fifteen Hundred Public School Children at the Opera House.

Another Year of Successful Educational Work Ended-Brilliant Closing Exercises of the High School.

The children of the public schools of this city had a royal time of it Friday. bearing these settlers and their families It was the closing of the schools for the summer holidays, and they were, for the time being, of more importance than anybody or anything in Fort Worth. They were the lions of the day. The cynosure of all eyes, who could deny that the wrapper, with your address and a merit attached to them, school children sent stamp, we will then send you the merit attached to them, school children agar and mackage of cards. Write plainly as they were, to attract all this respectful homage. Was not the opera house crowded, like it never is, even when famous stars exhibit, to see them in convention assembled? Surely they had cause to feel happy.

> In the afternoon the principals and teachers of all the buildings except the high school marshalled their pupils into line and, repairing to the nearest convenient spot, boarded the street-cars for the opera house. With great kindness the owners of the lines transported them without price, and for more than an hour the general public had to walk. It was no light task to seat so many, but it was done handsomely, a good many of the little ones sitting two in a chair. It looked as if the swarm would never end. The balcony was crowded to its utmost capacity with spectators, the majority of whom were ladies. The first on the stage were the pupils of the Belknap street school, Professor Mann, principal. A company of his boys dressed a la militaire, carrying rifles (not dangerous) occupied the rear of the stage, the little ones in front. They circled around it marching in good-time sae music of a piano, showing that they had been carefully drilled, as did all who came afterwards. After them came the children of buildings VII., I, III., IV. and V., principals, Professors Robbins, Williams, Williams Thompson and Haywood. As they came and went in quick succession they seemed to form a living sea of bright and happy

A NEW DISCOVERY.

A new method for the treatment of phthisis (consumption) has recently been introduced, and is now in full and pronounced favor with the most noted physicians of the east. The gas is a mixture of carbon dioxide and hydrogen sulphide, two gases pure and completely deprived hydrogen sulphide.
